UA Project Introduces Medical Science Coursework in Middle, High School

Health illiteracy is rampant in the United States, as practicing physicians know all too well. This problem is fueled in part by the severe lack of a suitable curriculum on common human diseases in K-12 education in U.S. schools.

In response to this serious problem, two nationally noted professors at the UA College of Medicine – Tucson successfully have implemented an innovative pilot project that introduces high school, and now middle school, students to graduate-level medical science coursework.

12th Annual Women’s Mental Health Symposium

Focusing attention on mental health issues and concerns that affect women of all ages, the 12th Annual Women’s Mental Health Symposium will be held Saturday, April 27, 8 a.m. to 4:45 p.m., at the Westin La Paloma Resort, 3800 E. Sunrise Drive, Tucson. What began as a local conference has evolved into one of the longest-running annual conferences on women’s mental health in the country.

Arizona Child Care Demand Study

Arizona parents tend to rely on a “patchwork” of child-care arrangements, while many are looking for new child-care options at any given time. In addition, many parents struggle to pay for child care or can’t afford to pay for it at all, according to the Arizona Child Care Demand Study.
