WASHINGTON -- Mark Kelly, the husband of Rep. Gabrielle Giffords, closed the National Prayer Breakfast on Thursday and offered a few words about the congresswoman's recovery from a gunshot wound.

Kelly told President Obama and the audience at the Washington Hilton that the past month "has been the hardest time of my life." He questioned why his spouse, an Arizona Democrat, was shot in the head on Jan. 8. "Maybe it was fate. I hadn't been a big believer in fate until recently," he said.

Giffords is now at a rehabilitation hospital in Houston, where Kelly says "she gets a little better" every day.

Kelly offered special prayers sent by Giffords' rabbi, Stephanie Aaron. He also told the audience he hopes that "maybe something good can come from all this."

The FBI has said that Giffords, 40, was the target of a shooting rampage that left six people dead and 13 wounded. Kelly, a Navy captain and astronaut, kept vigil by his wife's bedside while she was hospitalized at University Medical Center in Tucson.

She was transferred on Jan. 21 and is now undergoing therapy and treatment at TIRR Memorial Hermann in Houston, where Kelly is based.

Kelly will announce today whether he will command the space shuttle Endeavour's final voyage in April as scheduled, the Associated Press reported. He took a leave from training after the shooting but is scheduled to take part in a news conference at the Johnson Space Center.

Obama, who spoke about how his Christian faith has deepened while he has been in the White House, began his remarks with a nod to Kelly and Giffords.

"We are with them for the long haul, and God is with them for the long haul," he said.

Obama says nothing promotes prayer like the presidency.

"Let me tell you, these two years, they have deepened my faith," he said.

In discussing how the presidency has "a funny way of making a person feel the need to pray," Obama cited the challenges of the economy, health care and foreign policy -- as well as the fact that his Christian faith has been "questioned from time to time."

Though polls have shown that as many as 20% of Americans say he is a Muslim, Obama said that as a young community organizer in Chicago, "I came to know Jesus Christ for myself and embrace him as my Lord and savior."

Faith has sustained him in high office, Obama said, citing a quote from a predecessor: "Abe Lincoln said ... 'I have been driven to my knees many times by the overwhelming conviction that I had no place else to go.'

Political opponents can come together in prayer, Obama said. He pointed out a member of the audience: Sen. Tom Coburn of Oklahoma, a conservative Republican who rarely agrees with the president on policy.

"Even though we are on opposite sides of a whole bunch of issues, part of what has bound us together is a shared faith, our recognition that we pray to and serve the same God," Obama said. Then he joked, "And I keep praying that God will show him the light and he will vote with me once in a while."

"It's going to happen, Tom," Obama added to laughter. "A ray of light is going to beam down."
